

White House Easter Egg Roll 2006

Welcome to the White House Easter Egg Roll

Welcome to the 2006 Easter Egg Roll!
This delightful springtime celebration has been a tradition at the White House for more than 100 years, and we are happy that you have come to be part of it.

As you explore the lovely White House grounds, you'll find plenty to see and do. You might even meet characters from some of your favorite books!

In addition to the traditional egg roll, this year's festivities include lots of surprises and fun activities. Jack Hanna will be on hand to introduce you to some live animals, and magicians will entertain on one of the stages.
You can listen to music, decorate an egg, have your face painted, create some art, or enjoy my favorite part of the day—the story readings.

President Bush and I hope you have a great time today and collect wonderful memories at the White House!

Laura Bush

History of the White House Easter Egg Roll

Young Tad Lincoln, son of President Abraham Lincoln, hosted the first documented informal egg-rolling parties. But the honor of establishing the tradition we know today as the White House Easter Egg Roll falls to President Rutherford B. Hayes and his wife, Lucy.

In the post-Civil War era, the Capitol was the center of Washington. Press accounts in 1872 noted that egg-rolling activities were occurring on the grounds surrounding the renovated Capitol building. Neighborhood children found the Capitol's steep, grassy terraces a perfect place to play. Sitting on these terraces and eating their lunches, the children discovered that hard-boiled eggs would roll down the hillside. When Easter Mondays came, children flocked to the Capitol grounds to enjoy a day of play, bringing their dyed Easter eggs with them.

As crowds increased through the years, egg-rolling activities reportedly became more than a little rowdy and messy. In 1876 some Congressmen, tired of the torn-up grounds and slipping and sliding on the remains of boiled eggs, proposed and successfully passed an Act of Congress that said no part of the Capitol grounds could be used as a playground.

The announcement of the new rule was postponed in 1877, when a rainy Easter Monday kept egg rollers indoors. But in 1878, a public notice of the Congressional decision appeared in the press a few days before Easter Monday and informed the egg rollers the new law would be enforced. In response, according to a New York newspaper, a number of young boys approached a strolling President Hayes and asked for permission to use his back yard to roll eggs. Without promising, Hayes, experiencing his first presidential Easter, returned to the White House and made inquiries. Upon hearing the story, he directed that any children approaching the grounds on Easter Monday be allowed to enter.

On Easter Monday, the first children to venture onto the South Lawn found no one to turn them away and settled into their egg-rolling games. Word spread, and soon the grounds were bustling with children. So successful was the day that the following year the children did not ask but merely showed up and began to play. The White House Easter Egg Roll continued to grow. By 1889 there were more than 8,000 children on the lawn for the event, which included the playing of games such as "Egg Picking," "Egg Ball," "Toss and Catch," and "Egg Croquet."

The famous and the future famous have joined in the fun, including the wife and children of Alexander Graham Bell and the children of President Theodore Roosevelt. Charles Lindbergh attended in 1913 as the son of a Congressman, and, in 1927, was welcomed back to the White House by President Coolidge after becoming the first person to fly across the Atlantic Ocean. Also attending in 1927 was a young egg roller destined to become First Lady Nancy Reagan, who would later host her own Easter Egg Rolls from 1981-1988.

Occasionally cancelled because of rain, the annual White House Easter Egg Roll was temporarily stopped during World War I, World War II, and the refurbishing of the White House during the Truman Administration. In those times the egg-rolling tradition shifted to the National Mall and back to the Capitol.

First Lady Pat Nixon's staff initiated the first—and last—formal Easter egg hunt using real hard-boiled eggs. Only days later were all the eggs found, having emitted a pungent odor that could be detected by anyone near or far. By 1974 the most famous of Easter Monday activities—the organized egg-rolling race—was introduced. Wielding stainless steel serving spoons from the White House kitchen, youngsters lined up eight across and, at the whistle, raced down the marked lanes rolling, pushing, and occasionally launching colored hard-boiled eggs (prepared by the White House chefs) into the air on their way to the finish line.

Now each year, thousands of children eagerly await the chance to participate in the White House Easter Egg Roll, the largest public event held at the White House. They enjoy music played by nationally known children's entertainers, hear stories read by the authors of favorite children's books and other celebrities, have photos taken with popular costumed characters, and use their imagination to decorate their own Easter eggs. While the turn-of-the-century games have been replaced by newer activities, rolling a hard-boiled egg across the White House grass is still an annual highlight.

Animal Stage

Jack Hanna

Jack Hanna is an educator and animal enthusiast who makes his home in Ohio, where he was Executive Director of the Columbus Zoo from 1978 until 1992. While there, his top priority was to increase attendance by offering educational and entertaining events. As a result of these programs, more and more people started visiting the zoo. Over the years, Jack was able to convince community leaders to help him raise money to transform the Columbus Zoo and Aquarium into the state-of-the-art park that it is today.

In 1983, Jack was invited to appear on Good Morning America in New York. He eagerly agreed to appear knowing that this was a great opportunity to educate people across the nation about animals. This appearance was the first of many. He has been a regular guest and wildlife correspondent on GMA ever since, and appears several times a year on The Late Show with David Letterman. Jack has also appeared with his animal friends on Larry King Live, Hollywood Squares, the Maury Povich Show, Entertainment Tonight, Hannity & Colmes as well as on various news programs as a wildlife correspondent.

Jack's media appearances were taking up so much time that he could no longer manage the day-to-day matters at the Columbus Zoo and Aquarium. In 1992, he became the Director Emeritus at the Zoo.

In 1993 Jack became the host of Jack Hanna's Animal Adventures, a nationally syndicated television series, where each week he invites viewers to share in adventures all over the world in the quest to learn about wildlife.

2006 Cover Artist: Frank Ordaz

Born in East Los Angeles, California, in 1956, Francisco "Frank" Ordaz can't remember a time when he wasn't drawing something or someone. When Frank was ten, his father started entering the boy's drawings in juried art shows. He came to the attention of Alhambra mayor Norma Yocum, who introduced him to Sam Hyde Harris, a noted California plein aire artist. On Mr. Harris's wall hung an original oil painting by Norman Rockwell, one of his covers for The Saturday Evening Post, and it immediately captured young Frank's imagination. He was enthralled by Mr. Harris's stories of Rockwell and of Frank Tenney Johnson, a western painter. Frank Ordaz knew he would one day become an illustrator.

After graduating from Art Center College of Design in 1980 with a major in illustration, Mr. Ordaz began his career by designing movie posters. Shortly thereafter he relocated to northern California and began painting for George Lucas's Industrial Light and Magic where he worked on such Academy Award-winning films as E.T., Return of the Jedi, and Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom.

Mr. Ordaz's style of illustration is a synthesis of many influences. He has absorbed the color sensibilities of the California plein aire artists who were moved by the vivid Pacific light, most notably Edgar Payne and Granville Redmond. He integrates the classical narrative qualities and figurative disciplines of such artists as J. W. Waterhouse, A. W. Bouguereau, N. C. Wyeth, and Winslow Homer.

The illustrator of over 100 book covers, Mr. Ordaz recently won the Evangelical Christian Publishers Association's Gold Medallion Award for his illustrations for The Very First Christmas. He also has illustrated The Very First Easter, The Very First Christians, Kangaroo Island, Passion Hymns for a Kid's Heart and most recently Josie's Gift.

He lives in Auburn, California, with his wife Jana and two sons and is grateful to countless people who encouraged a young boy from humble beginnings.

2006 Easter Egg Collection Artists

The 2006 Easter Egg Collection continues a tradition that began in 1994, where each state sends a decorated egg to the White House for display during the annual White House Easter Egg Roll. The collection, coordinated by the American Egg Board, is comprised of impressive miniature works of art created through the use of paint, carving, decorative additions, and other art media. Thank you to each artist for a masterful presentation.
