Arrival Ceremony for Polish President Kwasniewski
July 17, 2002
Draft #6

02 JUL 15 4:11:10

Mr. President, Mrs. Kwasniewska [kvash-NYEV-skah], members of the Polish delegation, distinguished guests: On behalf of the American people, it is my great honor to welcome you to the United States. This is only the second state visit of my Administration, and it symbolizes the high importance America places on our friendship with Poland.

This friendship is rooted in our common history and sustained by our common values. This generation of Poles has written a story of courage and determination that has inspired America and the world. Out of a past filled with pain and oppression, Poland is constructing a future defined by greater freedom, good relations with its neighbors, and increasing influence throughout Europe. And today, Mr. President, we meet as leaders of two strong, mature democracies, ready to shape a new era of freedom and security.

Together, Poland and America are standing – and fighting – side by side in the war against global terror. From military forces to law enforcement, terrorist financing, and intelligence, Poland's support and solidarity in this great struggle has been unqualified, and America is deeply grateful. Our nations are determined to lead the way in NATO's efforts to develop new capabilities to meet new threats. We are united in our determination that our children will inherit a world defined not by fear and chaos, but by tolerance and freedom.

Together, Poland and America are building that freedom on the continent of Europe. Today, a new Europe is within our grasp – one that is whole, free, and at peace for the first time in its history. In November, the President and I will join other NATO leaders in Prague to decide on inviting new members into the Alliance. On this issue, Poland and America stand united: We believe in NATO membership for all European democracies ready to share in NATO's responsibilities. Our aim is for freedom and security to span the European continent – from the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, to the Baltic Sea and Black Sea.

Together, Poland and America are also building our common prosperity. The trade and investment that flows between our countries creates jobs and lifts lives on both continents. We are determined to bring the benefits of trade and markets to all our citizens.

Today, Poland and America are forging a new strategic relationship – but the friendship between our peoples is very old. Nine million Americans claim Polish descent. Over two centuries ago, when Americans were fighting for our independence, Poles fought alongside us. In the century just past, as Poles reclaimed their independence, America stood by Poland. And today, Poland and America stand and fight together for our common freedom, and for bringing the hope of freedom to all who seek it in our world.

Mr. President, in June of last year you welcomed the First Lady and me to Poland. You showed us a nation of deep faith – a central part of Europe's soul. And you showed us a nation alive with liberty and energy and enterprise. Today, Laura and I are honored to welcome you and your wife to an America that is proud to call Poland a friend, an ally, and a partner. Thank you for coming.

Press Availability with Polish President Kwasniewski
July 17, 2002
Draft #6

It is an honor to welcome President Kwasniewski [kvash-NYEV-skee] to the White House. Poland is a close friend, a good ally, and an influential nation in the center of Europe, with influence across Europe. America and Poland see the world in similar terms. We both understand the importance of defeating the forces of global terror – and America appreciates all that Poland is contributing to this great struggle. Our nations also understand the importance of building a better world beyond terror – one where prosperity replaces poverty ... and democracy and tolerance replace dictatorship and hatred. Poland and the United States are part of a great alliance of liberty, and we are working to spread the hope of freedom and prosperity across the globe.

We had good talks this morning, and I want to highlight two new initiatives we agreed on.

First, we agreed to expand cooperation between our militaries. Both Poland and the United States are seeking to transform our armed forces and develop the new capabilities we need to meet new threats, such as terrorism and weapons of mass destruction. By sharing ideas and expertise, our militaries can help each other reach our transformation goals faster and improve the ability of our forces to work together. We hope this initiative will be a model for similar efforts with other NATO allies.

Second, our governments agreed to cooperate more closely to expand our economic ties. The Polish-American trade and investment relationship is important to both countries – and it is particularly important to creating jobs and high-tech growth opportunities in Poland. We will work to resolve some company-specific issues and also improve Poland's investment climate.

These two initiatives will help build on our strong working relationship. Tomorrow, the president and I look forward to traveling to Troy, Michigan. You have to go beyond Washington to truly capture the energy and diversity of our country. Troy is just one of countless communities across our Nation that has been enormously enriched by the contributions and the values of Polish Americans. It will be a great honor for me to travel to such a community with the president of a free and independent Poland.

Toast – State Dinner for Poland
July 17, 2002
Draft #13

7/2 JUL 17 2002

Mr. President and Mrs. Kwasniewska [kvash-NYEV-skah]: it is a great privilege for Laura and I to host you here in the White House. Tonight's dinner is a small way of saying Dziekuja [jen-KOO-yeah]<sup>1</sup> for the warm hospitality you showed us last year during our time in Warsaw.

Today, Poland and the United States are meeting the challenges of our times, sustained by bonds of kinship, culture, and commerce that unite our peoples. Two centuries ago, Poles fought for America's independence. Before and since, thousands of American communities have been enriched by the energies of millions of Poles who came here to settle.

Mr. President, tomorrow we will travel to Michigan together to visit one of these communities. But pride requires me to point out that the oldest permanent Polish settlement in America can be found in my home state. In the fall of 1854, more than 100 Polish families traveled to the prairies of south Texas, seeking greater freedom and opportunity. They arrived at their destination on Christmas Eve, and they christened their new settlement Panna Maria – or "Virgin Mary." The town is still there – a living symbol of our common ties.

Just as Poles keep contributing to America's vitality, Poland keeps contributing to the vitality of the entire world. Poland's opposition to Soviet tyranny inspired half a continent – and brought down an Evil Empire. And the passion for human dignity and iron integrity of a Polish Pope has added to the momentum of freedom around the globe.

Freedom did not have to be imported into Poland – it is found naturally in the rhythm of every Polish heart ... a commitment of conscience and faith stronger than the brutality of conquerors and the official lies of oppressors. In 1989, Poles on all sides of the ideological divide made an historic decision to build a society based on democracy, human rights, and the rule of law. Two years later, more than one hundred political parties participated in Poland's parliamentary elections, including one called the Beer Lovers' Party. All but a handful of these parties were committed to a Poland founded on freedom. In the decade since, Poland has continued to be an example for other nations seeking to claim their democratic future.

And Poland has found what America has found: that democracy and free markets are unruly, disorderly, and complicated. They are also honorable, just, and indispensable to national progress. America and Poland are joined by a commitment to helping each other along freedom's road. Thomas Jefferson once wrote to Kosciuszko<sup>2</sup> [kah-SHOOSH-ko] and praised him for being "true to a single object, the freedom and happiness of man." Today, this single object defines Poland itself – and it defines the partnership between Poland and America.

Together, we can and we will complete the unification of Europe ... we will reach out to Russia and Ukraine ... and we will win the war against terror. Poland and America share a vision that is stronger than intolerance, hatred, and bigotry – it is a vision of a world that is free and just ... a world that respects people's dignity and rewards their enterprise and creativity.

Mr. President, let us toast the friendship between our countries. Tonight the old Polish saying has new meaning in a new century: "for your freedom and ours."

<sup>2</sup> An extremely well-known figure to Poles and Polish Americans. He left Poland to fight for America's independence in the Revolutionary War, during which time he built and fortified West Point. He was offered American citizenship and a brigadier general's title, but chose to return to Poland, where he led an unsuccessful uprising to preserve Poland's independence.

State Dinner – Thank You for the Evening Entertainment
July 17, 2002
Draft #7

- I would like to thank Vanessa Rubin and her accompanists, George Colligan [CALL-ih- gun], Lonnie Plaxico [PLAK-sih-co], and Alvin Atkinson for that cudowne [ts-oo-DOV-neh] performance.<sup>1</sup>
- Vanessa has the rare gift of taking the great musical standards of George and Ira Gershwin, Stephen Sondheim [SOND-hime], Johnny Mercer and Irving Berlin, and making us feel that we are hearing them for the first time. She uses music and lyrics to tell a story – to raise our spirits, touch our hearts, and remind us of life's joys and sorrows.
- Besides being such an accomplished vocalist, Vanessa is an extremely perceptive human being. "You just can't be as great at 25," she says, "[as] you're going to be at 55." I can relate to that, Vanessa ... And I can assure you: You're even greater at 56.
- Thank you once again for helping to make this such a wonderful evening. And now, Laura and I would like to invite all of you to join us out in the Grand Foyer for a bit of dancing.
