Radio Address
January 25, 2003
Draft #5

Good morning.

This coming Tuesday, I will deliver the State of the Union Address to Congress and the American people. Our Nation faces many great challenges, all at once. We will meet all of them, with courage and steady purpose.

In 2003, we must work to strengthen our economy ... improve access to affordable, high quality health care for all our citizens ... encourage compassion at home and abroad ... and defend our Nation against the threats of a new era.

The war on terror is an ongoing priority for our Nation. We will take every measure that is necessary to protect the American people from terrorist groups and outlaw regimes. The world depends on America's strength and purpose – and we will meet our responsibilities for peace.

Today I want to speak to you about a few key domestic priorities. When I address Congress, I will urge them to pass my plan to strengthen our economy and help more Americans find jobs. The tax relief already planned for later in this decade should be made effective this year – including income tax reduction, marriage penalty relief, and an increase in the child tax credit. When Congress acts, I will direct the Treasury to return this money to taxpayers right away, which will provide immediate help to our economy.

We can also lay the foundation for future prosperity by encouraging investment and helping Americans to prepare for the new jobs a growing economy will bring. I will ask Congress to eliminate the unfair double taxation of dividends ... and raise the deduction limit for small businesses that invest in new machinery and equipment. And to help unemployed workers find a job as soon as possible, I propose new Re-employment Accounts. These accounts will assist with the costs of finding work – including training, child care, and moving expenses – and provide a cash bonus to workers who find a job quickly.

Strengthening and improving Medicare is also a priority for my Administration in the coming year. I will urge Congress to join me in keeping our commitment to America's seniors by working to modernize Medicare – and include a prescription drug benefit to help seniors who are squeezed by rising drug prices.

As a prosperous Nation, we have an obligation to help Americans who are struggling to build better lives for themselves. So I will propose new initiatives to bring the work of faith-based and community groups to the needs of our fellow citizens.

All of these priorities will be reflected in the budget I submit to Congress in early February. As we fund important priorities, however, we must also practice spending discipline in Washington. Spending restraint is important to economic growth and job creation. And it is critical to reducing the deficit caused by war, national emergency, and recession. Under my budget, discretionary federal spending will rise by four percent – about the same as the increase in family incomes. Government should not grow faster than workers' paychecks. Government should follow the example of American families by setting priorities and staying with them.

In this session of Congress, we must work to make our Nation safer, more prosperous, and more compassionate. I look forward to working with Republicans and Democrats in this important year for America and the world.

Thank you for listening.

Remarks at the Swearing-in of Secretary Tom Ridge
January 24, 2003
Draft #5

Good afternoon, and welcome to you all. As of today, the law creating the United States Department of Homeland Security comes into effect. And now this Department has its first Secretary, Thomas Joseph Ridge.

Homeland Security becomes the 15th executive department of my Cabinet – and begins a vital mission in the defense of our country and our people. We have learned that vast oceans will not protect us from the dangers of a new era. This government has a responsibility to confront the threat of terror wherever it is found. Abroad, we are taking the battle to America's enemies – disrupting their networks, destroying their camps, and keeping them on the run. At home, we are taking every measure to protect the American people against a serious, ongoing threat.

The Department of Homeland Security will lead a comprehensive and unified effort to defend our country. The Department will analyze threats, guard our borders and airports, safeguard our critical infrastructure, and coordinate the response of our Nation to future emergencies. Under the leadership of Tom Ridge, more than 170,000 dedicated professionals will have the overriding mission of protecting their fellow Americans.

In October of 2001, when I established the White House Office of Homeland Security, I knew immediately that Tom was the right man for the assignment. He is a decisive, clear-thinking executive – a man who knows how to get things done. He is a person of integrity and good judgment. At the White House, he has done an outstanding job, and earned the gratitude of the American people. This week, he earned a unanimous vote of confirmation – and I thank the Senate for its swift action.

This new Department will face many challenges in the years to come. The American people can be certain that the mission of homeland security will be carried out with focus, resolve, and every resource the task requires. Americans can know, as well, that the Department is under the command of a superb leader, who has my complete confidence.

Mr. Secretary, congratulations.
